OLD PEMBERTON'S

A THANKSGIVING MYSTERY.

T. C. HARBAUGH.

a bare-headed boy rode at break-neck speed down the main street of a certain Western village, and drew up in front of the post-office, where was always to be found at that office, where was always to be found at that hour a crowd of loaters.

Everybody knew at a glance that the youth was old Enos Pemberton's hired boy, and expectation was at once on tiptoe. "Patty Pemberton has drownded herself!" cried the boy.

He was surrounded in an instant. "Where?" vociferated 20 voices at once. "In the water, of course! D'ye 'spose she do it in a plowed field?" "Can't they resuscitate her?" put in a young doctor with gold spectacles.

"They'll wait till they find her, first." "Oh!" said the crowd in perfect unison; and the boy, having delivered his message, rode back, leaving the entire population of the village to follow at its leisure, which proved the greatest haste imaginable.

Every one knew "Old Pemberton's girl." She was a wild, romping creature, and full of tom-boy tricks, although there was nothing particularly "bad" about her. She could break a colt and bake a pie to perfection, which her sister Molly, just nome from school, could not do; though, when It came to botany and the languages, she left Patty 'far in the shade," as Patty herself ex-

It was a queer freak for "Old Pemberton's girl" to drown herself. She seemed to enjoy life, had no real lovers that anyone knew of, and was the last person capable of committing such a deed-to the people's no-

The Pemberton farm was the largest in the neighborhood. A part of it was very wild ground. A deep stream flowed through this particular portion, and, in some places, its course was marked with chasms whose walls were rough and lofty. It was agreed by the excited populace, as it swarmed out to the Pemberton homestead, which was within "Old sight of the village, that Patty must have could not be entertained.

It was soon learned that the body had not been found. The stream had been searched. and the whole neighborhood was still at the task; but ut last reports Patty was still

"They found her bonnet near the Deep Hole," said Enos to the young doctor in the gold spectacles. "She went into the woods to look for table flowers for to-morrow. Mr. Phillips, my daughter Molly's city friend, is to be with us, and Patty thought to make things sort o' cheerful for him. I believe von've met Mr. Phillips?"

The doctor thought he had; yes, he remembered an introduction by Miss Molly. Mr. Phillips was a nice young gentleman. If he (the doctor) was not mistaken, he was a person well known in the city.

"One of the rising business men of N-," added Enos Pemberton, promptly. "He was afraid he couldn't be with us tomorrow, as his uncle, from whom he will inherit a comfortable fortune, is very low: but Molly heard from him this morning to the effect that the uncle had surprised them all by getting better. Now poor Patty has cast a cloud over our Thanksgiving, and just, too, when Mr. Phillips needs rest!" The doctor hoped that everything would yet "turn out for the best," and then joined e hunters along the creek.
"Ain't it queer?" asked young Zeke Zebthe expecious pockets of his overalls and looked into his companion's face. The two had been the most zealous searchers for "Old Pemberton's girl."

'What's queer?" was the response. "Why, that she didn't leave any note behind. That's customary, you know. They've found nothin' but the bonnet." 'It strikes me that they'll find nothing "Looks that way."

"Jealous?" roared Jack Juniper. "I'd like to know what'd make Patty Pemberton jealous. Come, Zeke! you can't catch me that way. Why, she'd rather break the scrubblest colt in the kentry than fall in love with a king!"
Young Zeke doubtingly shook his head.

"All gals are more or less queer," said he.
"You don't know when some are in love, nor when they get jealous. Patty told me

"Told you, Zeke?" "Told me!" emphasized young Zebedee. "Well, that's queer, too; but go on. What did old Pemberton's girl tell you?"

Zeke, who was an overgrown country youth, but not at all bad looking, assumed a sipple auditor. She told me that she didn't intend to remain single always," he went on. "She said she had several mighty good friends, he felt a grip on his arm.

table with flowers that Patty went to the Zeke's listener appeared dumfounded for a moment.

"It isn't natural!" said he, at length. "There's all the difference in the world be-tween the two girls. One like Patty wouldn't strike a fine chap like Phillips. Why, he's got money hoarded up, they say, and when he takes a wife he wants one with the rough edges polished a little Patty's a diamond in the rough. Don't tell me that Pemberton's girl was jealous of her sister's beau." Young Zebedee did not persist, although it was evident that the argument had not convinced him of his error; and the two went back to the search with opinions of

All night they plied the sorrowful search. Lights were seen and voices were heard along the turbulent creek, and messengers the different parties arrived at the farm house from time to time.

The late train brought the Thanksgiving guest from the city. Young Mr. Phillips was borrified at the situation. He had anticipated the most enjoyable Thanksgiving of his life, and to have his hopes dashed to earth in this terrible manner was-well, he could not do justice to his feelings. Thanksgiving Day dawned with the mys-tery of Patty Pemberton's disappearance still olved. The sun crept over the hilltops, and birds sang sweetly among the boughs; and nothing in nature told that an awful enlamity had fallen upon the neighborhood.

Mr. Phillips had been one of the last to come back from the well-hunted territory. He had tramped the banks of the creek for several miles, tearing his fine clothes on stones and briers. He had forded it in numerous places, to the utter ruination of his stylish pantaloons, and at the end of his hunt for the time he looked very unlike a business man who would soon inherit a cool fitty thousand from a Midas-like uncle. Zeke Zebedee saw the young merchant come back to the house in a most forlern condition. He was barely recognizable. "I wish Jock could see 'im now," mur-mured Zeke. "He's been huutin' all night, or ever since he came. Hasn't let up a minute. I'll bet he goes back as soon's he swallers a bite. Thar's pluck in that young chap. He likes the gal what kin jump like

It was the night before Thanksgiving, and | Zebedee, who evidently had been waiting at his side.

"Goin' back to it, ch?" ejaculated Zeke. "Yes. I don't see any reason for giving "Nearly all of 'em have gone home."
"I know it. Are you going to follow

Young Zebedee drew back and looked half

"Me? Me — Zeke Zebedee — quit the hust?" he exclaimed. "You'll find me there till this mystery is solved!" Phillips put out his hand. It was soft and small, and in a moment was lost in Zeke's giant palm. The two went across the fields together. More than once Phillips caught his companion eyeing him in a quizzical manner; but as often as caught Zeke would suddenly transfer his gaze to other objects. "So they're goin' to have the turkey for all, are they?" suddenly asked Zeke. "I don't know."

"An' Patty's mince pies, too?" The young merchant looked sharply at

"Who says so?" he inquired.
"Old Pemberton. He don't know whether his gal 's dead or alive, but the unsartainty ain't goin' to interfere with the Thanksgivin dinner they were gettin' up for you."

Phillips halted. They were in the heart of the wood, through which rushed the wild creek at its swiftest pace, and the noise of the foamy current at times filled their ears. The sunlight did not penetrate to that spot, and the trees stood so thick that one might easily conceal himself among them. There seemed to be an insinuation, not unmixed with sarcasm, in Zeke's last sentence; but it was not this that broke the merchant's tramp.

"They certainly won't do that," said he. "It wouldn't be right under the circum-

"Old Pemberton didn't stop to think. He's got a scheme in his head, and an eye fallen into the creek, for the idea of suicide to business. I wouldn't keer so darned much about the turkey, but there's the mince pies! Patty baked 'em! You can't stop the feast by going back; so come Phillips felt Zeke's grip on his arm, and in another moment he was dragged toward the stream. A change had suddenly come over the country youth. He now looked madly at Phillips, but the young merchant did not seem to take notice of it.

"Let's start'in where I left off," said Zeke when they had reached the high banks of the creek.

"Just as you say," was the answer, spoken almost mechanically.

The two went down to the water by a dangerous path. Here and there they were ject, and once Phillips, who was ahead, almost lost his footing. He could not help thinking how easy it would be for Zeke to send him headlong to the bottom of the gorge by a slight push, for he had come to look upon his companion as one not rightly balanced in some things. Was Zeke in love with Patty, and did he think that his rigid search for her meant more than the mere restoration of her to her parents? Once Phillips thought of stopping midway between cliff and current and telling him the truth; but he sealed his lips and kept on. At the foot of the wall Zeke explained edee, as he thrust his big brown hands into his theory. It was that Patty had fallen, not thrown herself into the water. that the current had carried her far from the fatal spot, and left her in one of the many caverns which abounded along the Zeke's plan was to search several of these caverns, one in particular. He said it could be reached by following the water into it. "But," he added, looking half contempt-uously at Phillips' city garments, "it'll ruinate store clothes like your'n."

"Never mind my clothes. I want to find Miss Patty. Come on!" Zeke led the merchant to the entrance of the cavern which he proposed to explore. The water was rushing in with a steady roar, and in a manner terrible enough to deter the stoutest-hearted.

"It's not hard to do if you know how," smiled Zeke. "Watch me an' foller—if you dare!" There was a subtle sting in the last words, and Phillips detected it. The following moment the country youth sprang into the current and was whisked out of sight in an instant. Phillips fol-lowed. For a little while the merchant found himself in a flood of boiling waters, confidential air, calculated to impress his and then he emerged therefrom in a dark place, and upon wet, slippery ground.

"What'd I tell you?" said a voice which he recognized as young Zebedee's, and then > Zeke took from a tin box some matches which had escaped the searching qualities of the water, and a little bunch showed the pair the walls of the cavern. Phillips saw his companion hold his

"He's Molly's capture!" was the retort.

"They're looking for him on the late train to-night."

"An' it was to decorate his Thanksgiving The light of the matches shone upon the print of a shoe! "You're a capital detective!" cried the merchant. "Why, you've found Patty!"

Zeke grew white. "I've found nothing but that," he said, pointing to the footprints, and then he sprang erect and clutched 'Phillip's shoul-

"By the eternal heavens! I want to know a thing or two," he went on, talking hoarsely, like a man who has lost control of his better judgment. "You came down hyer to do one, if not two things. You came to eat Patty's Thanksgivin' mince pies, an'—"

He seemed to choke. He seemed to choke.

"And what else, Zeke?" asked Phillips, dissembling his fear—he had fear—of the young giant before him.

"An'—an' to make love to her!" blurted Zeke. "You know you did! They say you're after Molly. Old Pemberton wants you to take the gal what knows the hifalutin names of the flowers; but I knows what your eyes ar'. Don't I know what Patty said to me none?" Patty said to me once?'

"What was that?" "That you were one o' her best friends, an' she said it in such a way—confound her!—that I caught at the true meaning. She baked them pies for you, Mr. Phillips. I watched her through the kitchen winder, and I saw her skullop them with her thumb—all because you were coming down. Now, Patty is somewhere in this place, an', by Jerusalem! you sha'n't look over her Thanksgivin' pies into her eyes un-

Zeke peroration was harshly invaded by the sudden appearance of a ghostly figure from the gloom, and, at the touch of a hand he staggered back with a wild

"Patty, by Jupiter!" Yes, before the astonished men stood "Old Pemberton's girl," her clothes almost in tatters, but still the same Patty of the deep, chestnut brown eyes!

. . . Half an hour later Patty found herself walking home between Zeke and Phillips. She had told the story of her adventures: she had told the story of her adventures; how she had fallen into the creek; back to consciousness in the depths of the cavern, from which she would never have escaped but for Zeke's thoughtfulness; and when she the cow jumped ever the moon. That's what had concluded, she looked first at the brawny young yokel, and then at the trimmer figure of the Thanksgiving guest. "I baked the pies for Mr. Phillips, for I knew he was coming," said she; "but I sgain. As he crossed the barnyard, which was the shortest out, he encountered Zene Zeke blushed to his temples.

As the Thanksgiving mystery had been solved in such a happy manner, the dinner which followed was the most enjoyable one ever discussed under Enos Pemberton's

It was observed that Zeke blushed again when Patty passed the mince pies, and when Mr. Pemberton said "More turkey, Zeke?" he stammered and looked at Phillips. It turned out that the young merchant's real guest was Miss Molly, and before the Thanksgiving dinner had digested the day for a double wedding had been set, and when it came one of the brides was "Old Pamberton's said." Pemberton's girl."

THE PLAINTIFF WON.

A Magistrate Who Was Willing to Decide Any Way.

"I was practicing law in a town just across the Ohio river," said the Kentuckian in the party. "There was a country Judge nearby who used to hold court in his parlor in the winter, and on the lawn in front of his house in the shade of a big oak tree in the summer. An arm chair tilted back against the tree was the seat of justice, and a weather beaten board lying across the tops of two whisky barrels answered for the bench. Attorneys, plaintiff, defendant and witnesses sat or stood immediately in front, and surrounding them in a circle were the curiously inclined. The case before the Judge on the occasion I have referred to was a horse case—Stokes versus Billings. The plaintiff stated his side of the case and was BEANS—Navy hand-picked beans, $2 25@2 30; about to call a witness.
"'I d'shide to' th' plaintiff,' hiccoughed

the Judge, who was almost stupid with drink.

"But, sir, you have not heard the defendant's side of the case at all,' said the opposing attorney. 'My client has a strong case, sir,' and he proceeded to elucidate it. 'I d'shide to' th' d'iendant,' the Judge interrupted.

"This brought the plaintiff's attorney to his feet. 'You have heard no witnesses yet, Your Honor,' and he went on to tell what be should prove by some of his leading 'swearers,' as they are termed in Kentucky. "The Magistrate was again convinced 'I'll change my d'shisun,' he said. 'I'll d'shide fo' th' plaintiff."

"This sort of thing went on for some time, until finally the effect of the Judge's pota-tions overcame him altogether. His head fell forward on the bench, and he couldn't be shaken back into sensibility. It hap-pened to be the plaintiff's inning, and the lawyer, placing a pen in the Judge's hand, guided it so that the decision was written in the Judge's book of record. It stood, too.

THE DATE OF THE DECLARATION. Prof. J. B. McMaster, the Historian, on That Grand Document.

Philadelphia Press. 1 Prof. John B. McMaster, the historian, was asked last night for his views of the letter of Thomas McKean that was read by ex-Secretary Bayard at the unveiling of the monument to Casar Rodney Wednesday. Mr. McMaster said: "There is nothing in the letter that was not already known. It is well known that the Declaration of Independence was adopted July 2 and was read to the public from the State House steps July compelled to cling to the sharp, cutting edges of the rocks to accomplish their obnial delegates, for the reason, among others, that several of them were waiting for clearer instructions from their respective colonies. It was signed after these instructions had been given. "The secret journals of the Continental Congress have quite all been published in fragments. What remains of them are on deposit in the State Department at Washington, and their contents are well known. It seems to me that Congress ought to make an appropriation to have them all printed, together with letters and other manuscripts throwing additional light on the subject. The journals are row, of course, necessarily imperfect. The ressions of the Congress were private. Nobody was admitted except members, unless by leave, and only a record of proceedings was made that would be safe. The journals were also partly burned when the British were in Washington in 1814, and afterward by a fire."

MERELY A BUINESS MATTER.

How Marrying a Second Time is Looked Upon by Some Men. New York Sun.1

A well-known business man remarked yesterday that John Jacob Astor and Secretary Bayard probably had reasons of their own for marrying which the papers did not fittingly represent.

"My brother was married twice," he said. and though he aroused some comment by his second marriage, it was in reality the only course open to him. He had two large country houses on his hands and a family of children, three of whom were girls just budding into womanhood. He is absorbed in affairs, and has little time to devote to his With him a wife was a part of his large domestic establishment. I say this without in any way meaning to speak in a derogatory way of her. It was a simple matter of absolute necessity for him to have some one to look after his house, and particularly to direct the social course of his

"Mr. Astor is in some sense similarly placed. He has every thing on earth to make life enjoyable except the personal companionship which every man naturally longs for, and he appreciates the wisdom, just as Mr. Bayard does, of having an accomplished and experienced wife to preside over that part of his life which is not connected with banks, politics or affairs."

Dairy products are quiet. Nearby poultry is scarce and markets are dependant on the West for supplies. Eggs are higher and very firm at the advance. The supply of fresh country eggs is far below demand. The demand for apples improves as other domestic fruits wane. Grapes are about at their end for this season. Florida oranges begin to come in freely and the drift of prices for tropical fruits is toward a lower level. Bananas are not in as large supply as for several weeks past, but demand is light. Potatoes are unchanged. Supply is sufficient and only choice stock finds ready sale. Sweet pota-toes are in fair demand at quotations. Other vegetables are unchanged.

Bearish European Reports Take the Backbone Out of tent-Pork Active Well Supported.

CHICAGO-Trading in wheat was light to-day nd the market was dull. There was no special news from outside, and business was lim ited both on local and outside accounts, There was some buying of December and selling for May by some parties, but this neces-sarily was not of any special significance, possibly covering and evening up of the former and putting out new lines for May. However, one prominent local trader has been credited with being a free buyer for December the past few days, and manipulation was again hinted. The pening was about 1/81/20 lower than yesterday's closing, advanced 1/20%c, ruled easier, and closed 1621/c lower for December and 1/c lower for May than closing figures of yester-

EGGS AND BUTTER GOING UPWARD. Pittsburg's Territory Depends on the West for Potatoes.

FLOUR STEADY AND CORN VERY FIRM.

OFFICE OF PITTSRUNG DEPATCH. | SATURDAY, November 9, 1889. } The distinctive features of the past week's trade in produce lines have been the upward tendency of butter and eggs. Elgin creamery butter is 21/10 higher than last week's quotations. At the advance, markets are rather slow, and the feeling among dealers here is that the Elgin Board went a little beyond the facts. Ohio creamery is offered at the same figures as a week ago, and the demand is light. The movement of all dairy products has been slow the past week, and the Fresh eggs are very soarce and very firm, at prices a shade better than a week ago. Scarcity of Ponitry and Eggs. An interview with a Clinton peddler who cours the country 50 miles or more west of Pittsburg every week developed some facts which are here jotted down. Said he: "In an experience of 15 years through the region from here to New Cumberland, I have never known the time when poultry was so scare at this time of year as it is now. I have found it impostime of year as it is now. I have found it impossible to secure one-fourth the number of turkeys ordered by my customers for Thanksgiving times; nor am I half able to meet demands for other poultry. There has been no time in my memory when poultry was so scarce in the section west and southwest of Pittsburg as it is this fall.

"There is also an unusual scarcity of eggs through the territory where I travel. On account of a late wet spring, hens were kept hatching later than usual, and the young chickens came in so late that they have not arrived as yet at the age tellurnish eggs.

advance in Elgin creamery, is not justified by facts as developed in this neck of the woods.

arrived as yet at the age toffurnish eggs. A Notable Contrast. "Last year at this time I was able to bring 300 dozens of fresh eggs every week to the Pittsburg markets. This week the best I could do, after sequring the country in every direction, was to bring 90 dozen, less than one-third my average. Those I had on hand went off my average. Those I had on hand went off like hot cakes to dealers at 250 per dozen, and for next week my entire stock is already ordered at 250 per dozen.

"Butter has also taken an upward turn since my last trip to the city. For a few weeks past the supply of country butter was above demand, and I had some trouble disposing of my stock. This is now entirely changed. While there is no difficulty securing all the butter wanted through the country, fhe demand has very much improved in Pittsburg the past week, and I have found ready sale for all good stock I brought this week at 250 per pound to dealers.

A Fruit and Pointe Famine.

A Fruit and Potato Pamine. "In the section of country about Clinton and through the Panhandle region, while the supply of apples is much below last year's yield, there is sufficient for all home demands, and hand-picked apples are sold at 85e a bushel. Last year they could not be given away in that ast year they could not be given away in that section.

"Potatoes are rotting so generally and so fast that the farmers about Clinton are now looking to Pittsburg for supplies. Potatoes are now worth more in Clinton than in Pittsburg. On my return trip last week I took two loads of Western potatoes from this city, for which I paid 40c per bushel, and found quick sale for them at 75c, to the farmers round about Clinton.

"We have never in my time had a better crop of hay, oats and wheat in our section than this season. But in all fruit and vegetable lines the yield has been below the average. The only fruits raised in our section in sufficient quantity for home demand are apples." Short Receipts of Coronia. It will be seen, by reference to the domestic market column, that grain and hay receipts for the week are more than 100 carloads short of last week. Notwithstanding the decline of re-ceipts, the supply is still in excess of demand, and markets are in favor of the buyer. Hay and oats are particularly slow owing to heavy receipts. Corn is firm, and shows an upward drift. NEW YORK-Pig iron active; American 816 00@16 50. Copper dull; lake, November, 812 10. Lead closed firm; domestic, 83 2254, Tin quiet and steady; straits, 822 20. drift.

The new freight rates on flour will go into effect on November 20, and Minneapolis millers are figuring on the extra price. The movement of flour has been very active this week, and all signs point to better prices in the near future. Low grades are slow, but fancy patents have, no doubt, touched the lowest point for this reason. Yonkers Statesman.]

A RUSH FOR SHELTER

Expected When the Filtting Time Comes Around Next Spring. From opinions expressed by nearly all the real estate dealers and agents, it may be accepted as a foregone conclusion that renting will be unusually lively next spring. Houses are scarce now and will be scarcer then, as there is a constant inflow of population, and everything will be picked up early. Business houses will probably bring more money, as will fine dwellings, but the about present figures. Although landlords are slow about signing the agreement for a change of moving day, it is thought they will give it their attention in time for adoption next spring.

Speaking of labor, Mr. Romero, the Mexican Minister, while inspecting, along with the other Pan-Americans, the operation of wire-drawing at Oliver's mill, remarked to one of the proprietors: "American workingmen sur-prise me. They have a manly bearing—an air of self-respect and self-reliance which can be seen in no other country. They are remarkably intelligent, too, capable of explaining all the processes of their work, and prompt in the discharge of their duties. With such men, no wonder your country is leading all others in manufacturing. The United States is the only nation without serfs." Pittsburg workers are accustomed to such compliments-and they fully deserve them, too. They will not blush, therefore, when they learn what Mr. Romero has said of them. Mount Airy, the land which Mrs. Schenley has donated to the city for a park is only 20 minutes' drive from the Court House. The nearest point of the park to the city is at Bo-quet and Jongaire streets, which intersect with Forbes street and Fifth avenue, about two miles from the City Hall. Eight years ago cancer came on my lower lip. It took off my under lip from one side to the other, and down to my chin. I had is treated by burning, and got so weak that I did not think that I could stand it much longer. After much suffering I discarded all other treatment, and began taking Swift's Specific, and the cancer soon began to heal, and in a short time it was completely healed and i was entirely well. It is now over three years since I got well, and there has been no sign of any return of the disease. I know it was cancer, and I know it was corred alone by S. S. E. V. FRERAND, Euston, La.
